Flush your taps

Research carried out by the Institute of Environmental Science and the Ministry of Health has shown some New Zealand water supplies contain minute traces of lead. These traces are near to or sometimes exceed maximum acceptable levels specified in the New Zealand Drinking Water Standards.

Traces of metals, in particular lead, are of concern because over time they pose a potential health risk, especially if consumed from childhood.

The lead does not come from the water supply, but from metals in some household fittings that may be dissolved into the water. The amount of lead that will dissolve from a fitting depends on the type of water, water temperature, composition of the plumbing fittings and how long the water has been in contact with it.

New Zealand waters are of very good quality and contain little dissolved substances and that contributes to their plumbosolvency (the ability of the water to dissolve the lead). The Ministry of Health recommends people do not drink the first mugful of water if their tap has not been used for several hours overnight, for instance.

Instead, run the tap for a couple of seconds to flush away any water contaminants.

For more information visit the Ministry of Health website, www.moh.govt.nz
