

Council to seek public feedback on three waters reform

The Council has formally committed to consult with residents on the Government's three waters reform proposals.

The Council last week unanimously passed a motion confirming it will carry out a full engagement and feedback process with the Selwyn community before deciding whether to opt in to the proposed reforms. The Government is proposing to transfer the ownership and management of Council water services to a larger public water services entity covering most of the South Island.

The motion formalises the Council's intention that the whole community must be involved in such a major decision, Mayor Sam Broughton says.

"This is a big decision that will affect everyone in Selwyn. We all agree we need to ensure good quality, safe services and environment outcomes. The question is how that is done and will these reforms be better for Selwyn residents.

"Everyone needs to have an opportunity to have their say over the future of their drinking water, stormwater and wastewater.

"We've put significant funding into developing excellent water infrastructure, which our residents have paid for. Putting this on the record gives people extra confidence that the community's voice will be heard in the decision over their most precious resource."

The Council is continuing to review and seek information from the Department of Internal Affairs and is working with other councils and Local Government New Zealand to understand whether the proposal is in the best interests of Selwyn residents.

The timing of any engagement will depend on cabinet confirming its timeline for the water reforms process and that it will remain optional for communities to opt out of the reforms.

Mayor Broughton says the Council will continue to ensure that Selwyn residents are kept well informed and that the nature of the reforms and their potential effects are explained.

"We are now analysing the information and data provided, so that we can understand the benefits and disadvantages – before putting this to our communities," he says

Have your say on speed limit changes

Consultation opens this week on planned speed limit changes for 27 local roads across the district.

The Council is also asking for feedback on four possible changes to speed limits in urban areas, on unsealed rural roads and outside of schools.

The 27 local roads or sections of road where changes are being considered are roads that have been identified through a range of factors. The include changes in housing development in the area; proposals as part of the Waka Kotahi NZ Transport Agency's Road to Zero safety strategy; requests by residents/road users that are considered appropriate in accordance with the Waka Kotahi Speed Management Guide. Some relate to sections of road where speed limit signs are in place or have changed but the speed limit has not been formally adopted.

More information including an online map, full list of the affected roads and submission form can be found at selwyn.govt.nz/speedlimitsconsultation.

Consultation is open until 10 September. Any speed limit changes on these roads will be implemented by December 2021.

The Council is also asking for feedback on four possible speed limit changes to help inform our planning.

New rules on how speed limits can be set are expected to come into force at the end of the year, along with a new national speed limit register. These regulations will replace the Selwyn District Council Speed Limits Bylaw and Speed Limits Register.

Under the new national regulations, the Council will need to produce a speed management plan for the district. To help inform the plan, the Council would like to hear people's initial views on the following possible speed limit changes:

- Reduce the speed limits on local urban roads to 40km/hr
- Reduce the speed limits on local unsealed rural roads to 80km/hr
- A new permanent speed limit of 30km/hr outside urban schools
- A new permanent speed limit of 60km/hr outside rural schools.

Growing numbers enjoying Council sport and recreation facilities

Sport and recreation is seeing a boom across Selwyn as growing numbers enjoy Council sport and recreation offerings.

Canterbury's largest indoor sports arena, the Selwyn Sports Centre, has been at the forefront of the increase in people taking part in sport and recreation at Council facilities. More than 127,000 have visited the centre in its first three months since opening.

There have been over 7800 attendees in group fitness classes every month and the centre has added virtual classes and is training three new instructors to keep up with demand.

"It is absolutely fantastic seeing how much the community have jumped on board with the centre and what we have to offer. One major contributing factor is the team here who are providing a professional, active and happy experience for those that come into the Centre," Selwyn Sports Centre Manager Dave Tippett says.

The Selwyn Aquatic Centre also saw almost 100,000 more visits from users, with people making just over 414,000 visits to the pools from 1 July 2020 to 30 June 2021.

Aquafitness classes at the centre almost doubled, with an extra 3895 class attendees over the same time, up 89% compared to the previous 12 months.

Learn to Swim classes were also booming with an extra 7509 enrolments, up 38% on the previous 12 months.

Numbers are likely to keep growing with the addition of the new 25 metre pool, which opened in June. Final renovations at the centre are expected to be complete by the end of the year.

The number of people taking part in recreation programmes also grew at the Lincoln Event Centre, West Melton Community and Recreation Centre and Rolleston Community Centre, with an addition 7,238 class participants compared to the previous year.

Council Active Selwyn Manager James Richmond said it was heartening how the community was enjoying the facilities.

"It's really encouraging to see the Council's investment in sport and recreation being so well received by the community. It's great to see the usage numbers continuing to climb and with that, increasing the physical and social wellbeing of so many in the district."
