

Figure 15: View of Port Hills from Summit Road looking south west

Higher levels of naturalness than lower slopes is apparent in the vegetation cover, as indigenous scrubland and tussock grasses colonise exotic pasture.

The rocks are natural, but the landscape is no more natural because of their presence – the primary indicator of naturalness is modification to vegetation elements and patterns, and ecological processes.